

New York City Gives
Royal Welcome to Japanese Mission,
Led by Count Ishii,
Sent to Bring Into Accord the War Aims of the Two Nations

Japanese mission leaving the City Hall after the official greeting by Mayor Mitchel. In the park were massed gayly dressed school children; on the City Hall steps were Junior Naval and Marine Scouts. The white clad sailors were from the Second Battalion, Brooklyn, and the soldiers were old 69th men.

Photo, Paul Thompson.

Above—Night scene on Fifth avenue at Thirty-fourth street, Waldorf at right, showing illumination for Japan's mission.

At right—March past of the West Point cadets in honor of the mission, a spectacle that always is impressive.

Japanese mission and reception committee on steps of the City Hall. Left to right—Judge E. H. Gary, Viscount Ishii, Mayor Mitchel, Ambassador Sato and Vice-Admiral Takeshita.

Photos Copyright, International Film.

Inspection of the Second Naval Battalion of Brooklyn just after the Japanese mission landed at the Battery. The naval militia-men acted as guard of honor.

Photo by a SUN staff photographer.